For more than thirty years, Days End Horse Farm Rescue has been working hard to help save horses from cruelty. The farm is committed to helping to make a difference in the lives of horses and the communities they call home. The farm has been a leader in the fight against equine neglect and abuse, and has integrated their educational outreach programs into their mission.

DEFHR is also a leader in the field of animal welfare. They have a number of educational programs that are designed to teach people how to make a difference in the lives of horses. These programs are aimed at helping people to learn about the importance of equine education, and the roles that professionals can play in making a positive impact for equine welfare.

For me, the educational component of our work is most compelling,” says Alexandra Harlow, Founder’s Award. It’s a sentiment shared by everyone in the DEFHR family, as the organization’s mission is teaching people how they can make a difference. Education and community outreach are two of DEFHR’s key priorities in helping to make a positive impact for equine welfare.

DEFHR has strong relationships with local animal control agencies, Maryland SPCA, and others in the Maryland and the surrounding states. DEFHR has strong relationships with humane agencies, and it is through these partnerships and programs that we are able to help investigators become comfortable and confident when working a case.

These partnerships and programs, national and international conferences, and industry expositions – all in experiential learning.

In addition to their wide variety of educational programs, DEFHR also frequently travels to schools, colleges and universities, community events, and organizations to teach emergency response. They also offer educational programs to teach emergency responders how to safely respond to an emergency equine situation. DEFHR also offers day camps for children. Our current camp for 7-11 year olds is currently accepting registrations. The camp is a great opportunity for kids to learn about horses, become more confident in their ability to take care of their own horses, and to develop the skills they need to be successful as a horse owner.
