

Bringing you news, advice, and tools to improve your barn management experience

The Official Barn Management Software of U.S. Equestrian

We all go to great lengths to help ensure that our horses feel and perform their best, between vets, farriers, chiropractors, supplements, thorough grooming routines, and well-planned fitness regimes – but have you ever considered how digital record keeping could help, too?

We talked to barn managers and riders about how they use digital records and created this list of five ways BarnManager could benefit your horses' performance.

1. Use detailed record-keeping options to zero in on what does and doesn't work for your horse. BarnManager's record-keeping feature allows you to easily store detailed notes on horses' treatments, show performances, training, and more.

There are a number of ways to make BarnManager's records feature work best for you, but Miranda Valentine, the barn manager for show jumper Charlie Jacobs and CMJ Sporthorses, shared how she breaks her records out by horse show to monitor what does and does not work for her team's horses.

"I like to make a title for each horse show, and then within that is where I specifically write paragraphs about each horse," said Valentine. "Each week of showing, I write down what the horse shows in and how they do. Then I add in any medications that they get, any therapies before, recovery, treatment times, anything that stood out to me as different and why it occurred."

By saving these details, and others such as the type of footing or venue or if studs were used in the horse's shoes, all in one, easily accessible location, it's easy to quickly see what was done surrounding the horse's best performances and what factors may have been most beneficial.

Amplifying Voices of BIPOC in Equestrian Sport – and How You Can Help

BarnManager was created to support those who love horses in their efforts to provide the best possible care for their equines. As our company has grown, so has our community of equestrians around the world.

So instead of checking a box or jumping on the bandwagon, we chose to consider what lasting role we could play to amplify the voices of Black, Indigenous, and People of Color (BIPOC) who love horses, to share their stories, and to pave the way for more BIPOC to be a part of the equestrian community.
