Six Benefits of Digitizing Your Barn Records

Making the move from paper records to digital can be a bit intimidating. It's likely that you're comfortable with the way you currently do things and would rather avoid change or a cumbersome learning curve.

However, there is also a chance that your barn office is filled with binders and paperwork, and, odds are, every once in a while there's a miscommunication among your team related to all that information.

How do we know? Because we've been there. But, by going digital, there's a good chance you can say goodbye to piles of binders and begin reaping additional benefits – like these six.

1.) It reduces clutter, saves paper, and streamlines your organization. We're listing this as one benefit, but it's more of a three-for-one. By going digital, you no longer need to worry about missing paperwork or disorganized binders (and you're saving trees in the process).

"We would leave notes for each other; if somebody was on antibiotics or we were going to increase the feed for somebody, we'd put that in the notebook, and we'd date it," said Dr. Susan Spivey, who founded and operates Southern Redhead Farms Rescue in Florida. "Now BarnManager helps us with that. It's a place for me to stockpile those notes on each particular horse."

2.) It keeps your horses happy and healthy. With digital records, all of your horses' health records are at your fingertips, making it easy to stay on top of their appointments, exercise, nutrition, and more.

With the feed, supplement, and medication management portion of BarnManager, your horses' nutritional and feeding records are displayed in easy-to-read tables and charts.

TIPS AND TRICKS

Tip of the Month

EquiFit's pre-cut Pack-N-Stick HoofTape™ eliminates the hassle of cutting, assembling, and applying duct tape. It's anatomically shaped to ensure correct placement on the hooves, avoiding the sensitive coronet band, and it features a high-grade adhesive that ensures a secure grip, even when worn overnight.
